

THE 1985 MARQUETTE

the 1990s, the number of people with a diagnosis of schizophrenia has increased in the United Kingdom (Meltzer 1996, 1998).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. The United Kingdom has a number of national strategies for mental health care (Department of Health 1999, 2000, 2002). The Department of Health (2002) has set out a vision for mental health care in the United Kingdom, which includes the following aims: to improve the lives of people with mental health problems; to ensure that people with mental health problems are treated fairly; and to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care.

The Department of Health (2002) has also set out a number of key principles for mental health care, which include the following: to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care; to ensure that people with mental health problems are treated fairly; and to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to live a full and active life.

The Department of Health (2002) has also set out a number of key objectives for mental health care, which include the following: to improve the lives of people with mental health problems; to ensure that people with mental health problems are treated fairly; and to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to live a full and active life.

The Department of Health (2002) has also set out a number of key measures for mental health care, which include the following: to improve the lives of people with mental health problems; to ensure that people with mental health problems are treated fairly; and to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to live a full and active life.

The Department of Health (2002) has also set out a number of key outcomes for mental health care, which include the following: to improve the lives of people with mental health problems; to ensure that people with mental health problems are treated fairly; and to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to live a full and active life.

The Department of Health (2002) has also set out a number of key indicators for mental health care, which include the following: to improve the lives of people with mental health problems; to ensure that people with mental health problems are treated fairly; and to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to live a full and active life.

the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Foundation 1999). The prevalence of mental health problems is also increasing in children and young people (Mental Health Foundation 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems. The Department of Health (1999) has set out a strategy for mental health care, which aims to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. The strategy is based on three main principles: (1) to ensure that people with mental health problems are treated as individuals, (2) to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care, and (3) to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to live a full and active life. The strategy also sets out a number of specific objectives, including: to reduce the number of people with mental health problems who are admitted to hospital, to improve the quality of care for people with mental health problems, and to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to live a full and active life.

The strategy is based on the idea that people with mental health problems should be treated as individuals, rather than as a group. This means that people with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care, and that people with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to live a full and active life. The strategy also sets out a number of specific objectives, including: to reduce the number of people with mental health problems who are admitted to hospital, to improve the quality of care for people with mental health problems, and to ensure that people with mental health problems are given the opportunity to live a full and active life.

*The Journalism Class Of Marquette High School
Presents The
"1985 Marquette Explorer"*

Instead of bidding a fond farewell
Instead of waving a sad good-bye
And trying to smile with a tear in my eye.
I bid you — "Come along with me."
"Ride my magic carpet of imagery."
We see the past.
Our days at Marquette — first and last.
Some parade past in colors light and cheery.
Or stumble by us dark and dreary.
All the tears shed like bright rivers twisting
Memories rise against the tide of time resisting . . .
Always there persisting;
In our minds existing.
Maybe our days weren't all the best.
But who said life was easy?
Don't turn your back on all the rest.
Don't yet close life's brave treasure chest.
We have yet to face, after graduation, life's ultimate test!
Have we learned how best to live?
That life's a game of take and give?
Have we made our choices clear?
Do we know what we hold dear?
Have our friends at Marquette High taught us true and not a lie?
That true and real friendship cannot die?
Have we learned that real maturity
lies in one's own ability
To get up after each defeat
and try a little harder, to each challenge meet?
The future — well, who can say?
What will come with each new day.
I've learned that mortals cannot often see beyond what others appear to be.
Remember friends
That at all ends
A new beginning springs.

RITE-WAY CLEANERS

the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased by 50% (Mental Health Foundation 1999). The prevalence of mental health problems in the UK is estimated to be 10% (Mental Health Foundation 1999).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of people with mental health problems in the workplace. The Department of Health (1999) has published a strategy for mental health care, which includes a commitment to improve the mental health of people in the workplace.

The purpose of this paper is to review the current state of research on the mental health of people in the workplace, and to discuss the implications for practice. The paper is organized as follows: first, a brief overview of the current state of research is provided; second, the implications for practice are discussed; and finally, conclusions are drawn.

Current state of research

The current state of research on the mental health of people in the workplace is reviewed in this section. The review is organized into three main areas: (1) the prevalence of mental health problems in the workplace; (2) the risk factors for mental health problems in the workplace; and (3) the impact of mental health problems on the workplace.

Prevalence of mental health problems in the workplace The prevalence of mental health problems in the workplace is estimated to be 10% (Mental Health Foundation 1999). This figure is based on a survey of 10,000 people in the UK, which found that 10% of people had a mental health problem in the last 12 months.

The prevalence of mental health problems in the workplace is likely to be higher than this figure, as many people with a mental health problem do not seek help, or do not disclose their condition to their employer. The prevalence of mental health problems in the workplace is also likely to be higher in certain occupations, such as those involving high levels of stress or high levels of responsibility.

Risk factors for mental health problems in the workplace There are a number of risk factors for mental health problems in the workplace. These include: (1) high levels of stress; (2) high levels of responsibility; (3) low levels of control; (4) low levels of support; and (5) low levels of job satisfaction.

High levels of stress are a major risk factor for mental health problems in the workplace. Stress is caused by a number of factors, including: (1) high levels of workload; (2) high levels of time pressure; (3) high levels of responsibility; and (4) low levels of control.

High levels of responsibility are also a major risk factor for mental health problems in the workplace. People with high levels of responsibility are more likely to experience stress, and are more likely to develop a mental health problem. People with high levels of responsibility are also more likely to experience isolation, and are more likely to experience low levels of support.

Low levels of control are also a major risk factor for mental health problems in the workplace. People with low levels of control are more likely to experience stress, and are more likely to develop a mental health problem. People with low levels of control are also more likely to experience isolation, and are more likely to experience low levels of support.

Low levels of support are also a major risk factor for mental health problems in the workplace. People with low levels of support are more likely to experience stress, and are more likely to develop a mental health problem. People with low levels of support are also more likely to experience isolation, and are more likely to experience low levels of job satisfaction.

Low levels of job satisfaction are also a major risk factor for mental health problems in the workplace. People with low levels of job satisfaction are more likely to experience stress, and are more likely to develop a mental health problem.
